Headline: Comview Introduces the First Real Time Web Based Call Accounting Service

Huntington, NY---October 16, 2004---Comview Corporation, a leading telecommunications solution provider, recently introduced the first real time Web based call accounting service, advancing the state of current telecommunications technology.

This service is made available through the creation of Comview's own propriety software application, made to run on standard PDA devices. The PDA device connects with a PBX, a private telephone network used within an enterprise, and becomes the data collector, processing and transmitting phone call records in real time. In the past, an additional step in the process, a proprietary buffer device, was used to transmit records. The software eliminates the need for a buffer, making phone records available and possible in real time.

The client benefits, cost savings, and real time capability, are all benefits of the software application. The proprietary software is less expensive than the traditional form of call accounting, but still maintains the same storage capacity and capabilities. The real time capability also processes the phone records from the PDA device to the Comview database in less than 2 seconds, making phone records fast, accurate, and available to clients immediately via the Web. In addition, the software is capable of immediately capturing the caller id of incoming calls, making it functional for security purposes in troubleshooting problems and identifying solutions. The application of this service on security makes the identification of the origin of 911 phone calls and the detection of harassing or threatening phone calls a possibility.

As the only provider of this capability to date, Comview continues to offer cutting edge, cost-effective, and customized solutions for their clients. Visit <http://www.comviewcorp.com> for more information!
